The Classic Edition comes with games that are, for the most part, roughly as good as the originals. I'll have a full review for you soon, but in the meantime, what I'm curious about is why those two franchises are the ones that made the cut. If I were to guess, I think it's because they represent two very different phases of Nintendo's gaming history. A quick recap: Mario and Sonic's eras are very different. Mario Bros. debuted in 1985 on the Nintendo Entertainment System. That's still a time when there were no 4-D games, no online multiplayer, and no save states. Unlike later games in the Mario series, Mario Bros. didn't feature any increased graphical fidelity or faster action. Mario Bros. was a game about speed and trial-and-error, not even trying to convey the appeal of shiny graphics. Mario Bros. became a franchise right alongside the days of Super Mario Bros. Sonic the Hedgehog was first released for the Sega Genesis in 1991, almost a decade after the NES came out. This game's predecessors were Sonic 2, Sonic 3 & Knuckles 1cdb36666d
