The difficulty is determined by the length of time it takes for the sprite to move from one point to another. I use Bresenham algorithm for this. I would like to know how I should go about implementing the features that will help the player. Some suggestions would be great. Thanks A: My first thought would be to give the player a slider or text box that allows them to control the difficulty of the game. For example: The text box might look like this: Then there are a few things to consider: Since the game can be easy, medium, or hard, make sure you set a minimum time for the game to run at all times. Make sure the textbox allows for the keyboard or mouse to be used to change the slider. My suggestion is to have the control panel be something like this: The difficulty can be set at the bottom and will auto-cycle between the three levels of difficulty. A reporter for Daily Banter, Murphy has been based in the Bay Area for the past four years. It's easy to forget, particularly in America, that Israel and the United States aren't just allies; they're friends. This doesn't mean that either the American government or the American people are always on the same page. America's support of Israel has long been a matter of domestic politics, with the Republican Party traditionally expressing itself as pro-Israel. But the last half-century has seen
