

For example, a modern bag made of canvas is often stamped with the year and month in the plant. For example, a leather trunk may be stamped with the year and month in the plant. However, if the calfskin trunk has more than one drawstring (cord) then it should be looked for a serial number. For example, a modern bag made of canvas is often stamped with the year and month in the plant. However, if the calfskin trunk has more than one drawstring (cord) then it should be looked for a serial number. Louis Vuitton Archive records are known to be outdated and to often provide the wrong serial number or the wrong year and month of manufacture and sale. The serial number of your trunk is found in a multitude of places: in the labels of the handles, in the maker's stamp (or sticker), in a similar stamp on the outside of the lock, in the lining of the trunk (on the inside), in a similar stamp on the lining of the trunk, on the labels of the lock or on the interior of the lock. This year and month serial number might be completely different from the serial number in the stamp on the exterior of the lock of your trunk. It's important to note that the serial number is often not found in its original place. It may be on a label, or on a zipper, or even on the color of the lining. The process to determine your serial number is not so complicated, and it can be done in 5 minutes. We advise that you have a notebook, a calculator, and that you've lined up all the places where the serial number of your bag can be found. The beginning of the process Let's begin. Step #1: Find the Louis Vuitton Archives' stamp number On the website the archival records can be found by scanning the following stamp numbers: 800.1311-1369 (calfskin trunks) 800.1310-1368 (calfskin trunks) The stamp number is generally found in 2 different places: either at the bottom or the top of the external lock of your trunk. On the Louis Vuitton online catalogue, you will also find the same number under the exterior lock label. Step #2: FIND
