Presonus Notion 6 Mac. Casey Miller, Stefan Leiman's twin brother, worked in the family business as a mechanic for 29 years. He also served in the National Guard during the Vietnam War and in the Pima County Sheriff's Department. With the business, he grew into a one-man store in Vero Beach. He catered to customers in need of diapers, Halloween masks and toys. He also fixed computers for people who couldn't afford to have their own. But he was frugal. He found the best toys on the market, often preferring to save $10 rather than buy a $40 piece. When he began growing grass in his backyard, he planted it in a fan shape and let it grow, saving water. He gave away raffle tickets for free rides in his Ford Mustang. When Stefan entered the hospital for tests, Casey gathered with his mother, father, brother, sister and other siblings to pray for a good outcome. The family closed the store and went to the hospital. "I wanted to talk to him," Casey said, but when he got to the hospital, the doctors wanted him to turn around. He turned around and he saw his brother was gone. "I think it was the most helpless feeling I have ever had," Casey said. "I did everything I could to make him better and he was gone. That's the worst part of the whole thing." Stefan had become too big for his mother to carry, so he went to live with Casey and his mother. The family thought of it as a second home. Stefan's death left Casey without a sibling for the first time in his life. He became the man of the house. He watched him grow, physically and mentally. "He was the funniest person I know," Casey said. "We would always be laughing." He credits his father, Sheldon, for reading the Bible to him and to his mother, Violetta, who would wash all of the clothes and, even though she was 60 years old, ironed all of his shirts. Stefan's sister, Anna, would help him to work on his schoolwork. If Casey was too tired, he would put his head on a pillow and go back to sleep. If he was feeling angry, he
