As well known, in recent years, the number of patients infected by AIDS has been increasing and thus the demand for treatments of AIDS, for instance, for AIDS treatments by orally taking drugs is rising with the increase of patients suffering from AIDS. As a process for preparing the above medicines or pharmaceuticals, use has been made of a processing technique called a wet granulation technique. With this technique, the following preparation process is performed: powders of medicines are mixed with a binding agent such as, e.g., gum arabic and water, and the mixture is kneaded by a kneader or the like, and granules are obtained by granulation. Furthermore, in recent years, an anti-AIDS agent for use in a wet granulation process, having a low toxicity has been in demand. In Patent Documents 1 and 2, there is disclosed a process for producing medicine or pharmaceuticals having high content of an anti-AIDS agent by a wet granulation process using, e.g., an anti-AIDS agent having a low toxicity. In Patent Document 1, there is disclosed a process for producing a dry pharmaceutical product containing a biologically active substance of vitamin B12 having the chemical structure shown by the formula (1) [Chemical name: 5-methyltetrahydrofolate] $(H_3N)CH_2CH_2CH_2CH_2COOH$ wherein, R represents a hydrogen atom, a methoxy group or a hydroxyl group, R' represents a hydrogen atom, a hydroxyl group or a methoxy group, and R'' represents a hydrogen atom or a hydroxyl group. In Patent Document 2, there is disclosed an anti-

AIDS agent for use in a wet granulation process, in particular, having a low toxicity, comprising a hydroxylated folate derivative having the chemical structure shown by the formula (2) [Chemical name: 5-methyltetrahydrofolate] (H

Endotoxin-induced respiratory acidosis: a hemodynamic study. Respiratory acidosis has been reported to be induced by endotoxin, but the hemodynamic changes have not been previously described. Therefore, this study was undertaken to examine the effects of endotoxin on pulmonary and systemic hemodynamics. Adult male swine were anesthetized with thiopental sodium and mechanically ventilated with O₂-N₂O. The animals received either an intravenous bolus of endotoxin (0.1 mg/kg) or saline (1 ml/kg) at time zero. The animals were then observed for 60 minutes. Respiratory acidosis was confirmed by a marked decrease in the pH and PaCO₂ and a rise in PaO₂. There was a moderate increase in the PVR and pulmonary vascular resistance index in the endotoxin group. Pulmonary capillary wedge pressure was lower in the endotoxin group at 30 minutes and PVR was lower at the end of the study. Cardiac output and right and left atrial pressures were similar in both groups. Systemic vascular resistance index was decreased in the endotoxin group at 30 and 60 minutes. There was a significant decrease in systolic blood pressure in the endotoxin group at 10, 30, and 60 minutes. With the growing importance of web applications, the use of session identifiers has increased as well. The main reason for this is the performance gain from reusing sessions. Additionally, the session identifier is an effective mechanism for maintaining state within a web application. While the use of session identifiers is increasing, the existing solutions for doing so are largely lacking. One way is to store the session identifier in cookies. However, this approach imposes several drawbacks, such as cookies often requiring storage space, requiring a round trip to the server for retrieval of the session identifier, and the need to store the session identifier in the header of each response.
