Thanks for your understanding. If you would like the feature, let me know. I'm working on an iOS application and it's got a search bar and a side menu. I'm trying to avoid creating a new.xib file for the search bar and side menu. I want to simply have a main view that has some content and then a search bar and a side menu. I'm struggling to find a solution. The easiest thing would be to simply have one.xib file for the main view, then in the main view have a search bar and side menu. Is this even possible?

The main view is an UITableViewController, it's embedded inside a UINavigationController. I could use a View Controller for the search bar and side menu, but I don't want to recreate a View Controller every time the user enters data into the search bar. If this is possible, please can you provide a solution? I'm new to iOS development, so please forgive me if I'm missing a solution.
