In 1974, at the Glensville Sanatorium, .Can We Protect the Bones of Children Who Are Taking Dexamethasone? To test the hypothesis that children who are taking dexamethasone, a steroid that is frequently used to treat asthma, have lower bone mineral density (BMD) and a higher prevalence of osteoporosis and low BMD at the spine than children who are not taking corticosteroids. One hundred eight pediatric patients in the Midwest Allergy/Asthma Clinic were selected; 84 were on long-term corticosteroids, and 24 were not. Children were invited to participate in the study during routine visits, and parents signed informed consent forms. Dual-energy x-ray absorptiometry scans of the spine were completed, and height and weight were measured. Steroid dose was assessed from the chart, and age was obtained from the questionnaire. There were no differences in age, sex, height, weight, and dose of dexamethasone between children who were and were not taking the drug. Children taking corticosteroids had significantly lower BMD at the lumbar spine and femur compared with children who were not taking corticosteroids. Children with lower BMDs had significantly higher doses of dexamethasone than those who had normal BMDs (P 2d92ce491b
