Category: Education in India Comparison of the dopamine releasing properties of the novel psychostimulant SKF-38393 and the substituted amphetamines DOI and DOM in vivo in the rat. The effects of the novel psychostimulant SKF-38393 on dopamine (DA) release in the striatum of freely-moving rats were studied in comparison with those of the substituted amphetamines DOI and DOM. The effects of these drugs were investigated in the concentrations of 100, 250 and 500 nmol/kg given intracerebrally. The stimulant effects of both DOI and DOM were dose-dependent, although the doses required for half-maximal stimulation were approximately ten times larger for DOI (250 and 500 nmol/kg) than for DOM (approximately 100 nmol/kg). SKF-38393 induced marked DA release, however, the effect was not dose-dependent and was not significant at doses of 500 nmol/kg. The potent stimulant effect of DOI was found to be abolished by pretreatment with the 5-HT antagonist metergoline (0.1 mg/kg), as was that of SKF-38393. There was no significant difference in the ability of these compounds to induce DA release in the presence of the 5-HT receptor antagonist metitepine (0.2 mg/kg), however, the effect of SKF-38393 was significantly greater than that of DOI. These data indicate that the effects of the novel psychostimulant SKF-38393 and of DOI and DOM on DA release are more complex than was expected from their simple classification as stimulants. The relative potency of these compounds in evoking DA release is SKF-38393 greater than DOI greater than DOM.
