We report on the results of a study designed to assess the mechanical and biological performance of a novel silica-calcium phosphate (SiCaP) cement in both an in vitro setting and an in vivo canine study. SiCaP cements were prepared using a sol-gel process from a mixture of an amorphous SiO₂ precursor and a tricalcium phosphate. Samples were evaluated for their setting characteristics and strength. Biocompatibility was evaluated using in vitro tests, including the mouse osteoblast cell-line and bone cell attachment and proliferation tests. In vivo radiographic analysis of bone healing was performed following implantation of the SiCaP cement into canine femoral defects. The SiCaP cement demonstrated a setting time of between 9 and 12 min in distilled water. The setting time was reduced to between 6 and 8 min by the addition of 1.5 M nitric acid. Compressive strength values ranged from 1.1 MPa to 1.2 MPa with and without nitric acid, respectively. The mixtures maintained mechanical integrity following 24 h of setting in 1.5 M HCl. In vitro testing of the SiCaP cement demonstrated very high levels of cell attachment and proliferation. No adverse effects on cell viability were observed with the new cement. In vivo radiographic evaluation of femoral healing in a canine model demonstrated progression of bone defect healing with the implant, with no adverse tissue reaction. Within the limitations of this study, the new SiCaP cement exhibited excellent in vitro and in vivo biocompatibility with no adverse tissue reaction and was shown to have a mechanical strength comparable to PMMA. This study indicates that the SiCaP cement represents a potentially useful bone substitute and further research is warranted. ba244e880a
