Tucked into the alley along 19th Street's restaurant row is a little restaurant that, until recently, stayed in the shadows. Awnings of bright yellow, nautical blue and yellow blue would have warned you of its existence as you walked down the street, but now that awning is gone. The no longer hidden occupants were apprehensive to be photographed. The first hint that something was up comes from the white-stone walls that have an upscale feel. In fact, they're the same style that were used by the Plaza Hotel in both the Old World and the Le Méridien. You might not see the similarities immediately, and upon entering you might be a little shocked to find the name: Hotel Monaco. Laurel and Hardy with the Hotel Monaco's ballroom as backdrop. Continuing the luxury theme, guests are greeted by hotel staff in black nautical dress uniforms. Wearing nautical, not being able to afford it, or being a seagoing man was the major reason that Laurel and Hardy vacationed in Savannah in the late 1930s. But I must admit, I'm not sure I could drop four hundred dollars for a room, especially if I didn't get a balcony. The most important rooms for me would be the larger, corner booths, 1cb139a0ed
