More particularly, the invention relates to an improved method and apparatus for analyzing a plurality of measurement data sets to determine the wellbore angle and azimuth of an earth formation surrounding a borehole. 2. Description of the Related Art A variety of techniques exist for determining the direction and position of earth formations surrounding a borehole. One such technique uses acoustic caliper techniques to determine wellbore azimuth and wellbore angle. In this technique, one or more acoustic calipers are located at different depths in a wellbore and an acoustic signal is transmitted from one of the calipers into the earth. The arrival of the acoustic signal at the other caliper(s) is detected, the wellbore azimuth and wellbore angle determined and reported. This type of acoustic caliper system is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 3,946,812 (Fullenwider). Another method for determining the direction and position of earth formations surrounding a borehole uses a LWD system to measure the velocity of the formation fluid in a borehole. A LWD system is a measurement system for providing at least two measurement signals. Each measurement signal may be a set of signals obtained from a separate transmitting and receiving apparatus located at a location outside of the borehole. The apparatus transmit acoustic energy into the earth and detect acoustic energy reflected back to the surface. The apparatus may also detect and measure electrical conductivity of the formation fluid, density of the formation fluid, or both. LWD systems are available that include a plurality of measuring devices and/or receivers that receive different portions of the acoustic signal. For example, it is known to provide a LWD system with four receivers to provide four measuring devices. The LWD system has a first transmitter, located above a first receiver, a second transmitter, located above a second receiver, a third transmitter, located above a third receiver and a fourth transmitter, located above a fourth receiver. In use, the LWD system is lowered into a borehole, and an acoustic signal is transmitted from a first of the transmitters to the first receiver, an acoustic signal is transmitted from a second of the transmitters to the second receiver, an acoustic signal is transmitted from a third of the transmitters to
