HEROON KRAUT NICKNAME IS A DISASTER What a disappointment. A despicable and shameful nickname, Heroin, has been thrust upon our beloved Kraut-Camper nation. We have been denigrated by a baseball team from Massachusetts that is worse than a sewer and slime. The Krauts have been forced by Yankee nation to make amends by choosing a new nickname for America's greatest baseball team. Former San Francisco Giants slugger Barry Bonds has persuaded the extreme left wing of America to embrace the moniker. Americanism is being torn apart, burned, and eaten. This is a damning indictment of American society. The whole word is at risk. What a pitiful performance. The mascot's name choice is the epitome of what makes the city of Boston and its citizens so historically famous. It's not just that David Ortiz has had to sign autographs, throw out boogers, and jump around to the tune of the "Marina and the Diamonds" knockoff band, MMK (My Fenway Kind), it's that the Yankees are on a slippery slope. They've just managed to humiliate us in Los Angeles. And now they are doing it to us in our city. We don't need the weak and ignorant David Ortiz and his minions on our Boston Red Sox to monger hatred and division. As much as we tolerate and cheer the Yankee's, we could do without their public appearances and their nutty stunts. The reason why all of this is happening is because the New York Yankees stink. It's a chicken-skin wrapped mackerel wrapped in butchered raw meat that Yankees fans eat. It's after-birth. You know how when you have a baby, the first thing you do is take it out of the birthing canal and shake it like it's a wet dog? That's what Yankees fans feel like at the sight of George Steinbrenner. They want to shake it like it's a bag of dirty rags. They are the smelly stench of the New York Yankees. And that Yankee stench is the only reason these Yankee goons think it's good that our beloved Red Sox have been forced into this nightmare. I just hope that the great American people and the National League go all the way with this foolishness by naming our team the Red Sox. It was unthinkable, but now it is possible. The Red Sox were the great symbol of Greater America. It was unthinkable

Intraoperative transesophageal echocardiography during mitral valve surgery: initial experience in 147 patients. The clinical usefulness of intraoperative transesophageal echocardiography in the assessment of the mitral valve was examined retrospectively in 147 patients undergoing mitral valve surgery. Intraoperative transesophageal echocardiography was performed before and after cardiopulmonary bypass as well as in 40 patients during and after cardiopulmonary bypass to examine the mitral valve. In 14 of the 147 patients intraoperative transesophageal echocardiography was judged to be of limited diagnostic value. In all other cases the intraoperative transesophageal echocardiographic findings were confirmed by the histologic results. Two patients showed mitral valve endocarditis, but one of these was treated by surgery because of severe mitral insufficiency, while the other had a chorda tendinea ruptured by endocarditis. Another patient required bypass surgery for massive mitral insufficiency due to infiltrative endocardial myocardial disease. Intraoperative transesophageal echocardiography was also performed in 35 patients during cardiopulmonary bypass and/or on return to the operating room, resulting in appropriate clinical decisions based on these data in 29 cases. The remaining six patients had preoperative poor-grade mitral regurgitation which had improved due to both surgical and nonsurgical therapeutic measures. In all other cases, intraoperative transesophageal echocardiography did not change the type of surgical procedure. Intraoperative transesophageal echocardiography has many advantages, such as the use of the probe outside the surgical field, the ability to take multiple images, and the capability of detecting anatomic pathology preoperatively. and did not consume the goods while in their possession; lodging or listing the goods at auction; setting the price of the goods or negotiating with a buyer; negotiating the sale of the goods to a buyer or negotiating the method by which the goods will be sold; asking the buyer to take delivery of the goods; and opening an account for the goods. 283(2) Subsection (1) does not prevent a person who acquires the goods under a contract made before the first day of July, 1997, from taking possession of the goods in the ordinary course of business or negotiating the
