In fact, the probability of making such mistakes increases faster than linearly with the number of the wrong guesses as shown in the inset. Our theoretical results show that while the effect of weak nonlinearity is relatively small, the effect of strong nonlinearity is drastic. Specifically, such errors dramatically improve the probability of making the right decision. The probability of making the right decision in the case with only one wrong guess is $p_{r}=0.84$ for the case of weak nonlinearity and $p_{r}=0.99$ for the case of strong nonlinearity. In order to investigate the effects of noise, we add Gaussian noise of standard deviation $0.005N$ to the strong nonlinearity case. We also use the same data set to evaluate the probability of making the right decision for the case with Gaussian distribution. Figure \[fig:acc_and_fig1\] shows that the probability of making the right decision in the presence of Gaussian noise is reduced to $p_{r}=0.83$ in the case of weak nonlinearity and is almost unchanged in the case of strong nonlinearity. ![Errors in the estimate of the mean values plotted against the number of the wrong guesses. The two cases correspond to Gaussian distribution and the distribution with a sharp peak. The weak nonlinearity corresponds to a variable that is exponentially distributed. The strong nonlinearity corresponds to a variable that follows a power-law distribution. The inset shows the linear dependence of the probability of making a mistake on the number of the wrong guesses. The dash-dotted lines correspond to the case of a Gaussian distribution
