Kinetic characterization of the p110alpha subunit of the class IA phosphoinositide 3-kinase catalytic unit. The phosphoinositide 3-kinases (PI3Ks) are a family of lipid kinases that catalyze the phosphorylation of phosphatidylinositol-3,4,5-trisphosphate (PIP3).

The class I PI3Ks consist of a 110-kDa catalytic subunit and a regulatory subunit (p85). The regulatory subunit recruits the enzyme to membranes and masks the lipid substrate binding domain, the pleckstrin homology (PH) domain. The catalytic subunit has several isoforms. We have purified the p110alpha isoform from a human multiple myeloma cell line, and characterized its kinetics and substrate specificity. We find that p110alpha is a monomer with a $K(m)$ of 7.9 μM for PIP3. Kinetic analysis indicates that p110alpha has a $K(m)$ of 0.5 μM for phosphatidylinositol and a higher affinity for other phosphoinositides than for PIP3. Saturation kinetics suggest that p110alpha has a $K(\text{cat})$ of 4.1×10^6 s(-)(1) and a $K(\text{cat})/K(\text{m})$ of 3.2×10^5 s(-)(1) micromol(-)(1). Unlike other class I PI3Ks, the p110alpha subunit is monomeric and has a relatively high PIP3 specificity and catalytic activity. Building a Visual Search Engine for Foursquare (Part 1) - cdmwebs ===== hendler The title should not be "Building a Visual Search Engine for Foursquare" but "Building a visual search engine for Foursquare part 1" ~~~ larrywright I am guessing that they figured out the visual search part on their own. ~~~ hendler My point being there is a deeper point about building a search engine. (If it's visual search, it doesn't need to be search.) ----- quellhorst The main search is working great. I was only doing dates because I noticed my lack of vocabulary. -----
