We present our experience with bovine pericardial valves in patients on hemodialysis. The study includes 27 patients with a mean age of 58 +/- 14 years, (range: 18 to 78 years), with a total of 67 bovine pericardial valves implanted as vascular access in the period 1989 to 2004.

Mean follow-up is 4 +/- 3 years (range: 15 months to 15 years). Patients were regularly evaluated pre-operatively and at follow-up by clinical examination and Doppler echocardiography. In the early post-operative period there was an increase in the mean interdialytic weight gain. Patients had a low number of morbidity and mortality in the early post-operative period, but patient survival was low, with a mean life expectancy of 5.1 +/- 3 years. Twenty-six of the 67 valves remained working for an average of 10.5 +/- 1.8 years.

Thirteen patients had a thrombosis and 10 percutaneous angioplasties. There were no observations of migration of the pericardial valve. During the study period, 14 patients had a second pericardial valve. The mean biochemistry values of potassium and calcium were not significantly different at baseline and at follow-up. Our experience shows that hemodialysis through a bovine pericardial valve is a safe and durable practice. Jan. 29 —

Zardari joins Sushma for Pakistan visit ISLAMABAD - Pakistan's President Asif Ali Zardari joined Indian External Affairs Minister Sushma Swaraj today for a visit to India, where he also met with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh. Local media outlets quoted Zardari as saying f30f4ceada
