Download link:THE moment the storm battered the city's seafront, Gus Montgomery went into overdrive. Already a pub landlord and the owner of the Phoenix Inn in Swanley, he was in charge of the drinks sales in a bar he had managed for 15 years. But the current storm - the Stormy Petrel, as it was quickly dubbed - showed no sign of letting up. So Gus went to work. Rows of behind the bar vodka and gin bottles were carefully balanced precariously in his hands, as he read out the weather forecasts to worried friends and customers, taking calls from concerned relatives and organising the delivery of shops' goods. He was busy from 4am to around 2am as, day after day, the storm barrelled towards Kent. Knowing that the seafront in Swanley had been battered by previous storms, Gus was certain that the current pummelling wouldn't be anywhere near as bad. And it was. He described it as "one of the biggest storms in my lifetime". The lashing wind ripped the curtains off the windows and battered the house. "The worst of it was about 1am," he said. "I've never seen windows all the way down a house before." Down the road in his Swanley home, Marion had a much less dramatic experience. She was sat at home when the storm hit. "The children were in the garden," she said. "I was watching them in the garden. I thought it was a bit windy and with the feeling of foreboding, I knew what was coming. ♦
