This proposal is for the first renewal of the Columbia University HIV Neurobehavioral Research Training Program (HNRP), which provides integrated training in the neurobiology of HIV, its clinical manifestations, and therapies. The major strength of this program is that it provides three year training in specialized areas of HIV-related neurobehavioral research. Over the five year period of funding of the current program, we have trained 32 fellows. Of these, 45% were physicians and 25% were PhDs. Of those who were not physician-scientists, 95% of them pursued other careers. These include fellows who are currently pursuing basic science research, fellows who have been successful in obtaining academic positions, fellows who have been appointed in basic science positions, fellows who have been successful in obtaining clinical research positions, fellows who have been successful in obtaining research funding, and fellows who have obtained industry positions. All of our previous fellows have been able to secure funding or otherwise obtain positions in the field. The success of the program is demonstrated by the fact that the HIV Neurobehavioral Research Center (HNRC) has attracted $6 million in annual direct funding. The HNRP is a large, multidisciplinary program, with 62 preceptors in 16 departments. The training faculty includes 12 basic scientists, 22 physicians and 2 PhDs. Included are investigators with a strong background in behavioral/cognitive neuroscience who have strong training in HIV-related research and in the neurobiology of normal and diseased cognitive function. There is substantial faculty interaction between basic scientists and physician scientists, and between physician scientists and behavior scientists. Strong collaborations exist among the different disciplines, and there is considerable cross-fertilization. The availability of training resources and faculty resources is diverse and extensive, with a long tradition of support for neurobehavioral research. The recent funding increases for our research core laboratories and new faculty are further indications of the strength of our core programs. We also provide training in the ethical conduct of research, including issues of race and gender. A basic principle is that training is provided to trainees regardless of their career choices, and each of our trainees has chosen to focus on HIV-related research. Formal didactics, clinical training, and performance on a battery of neuropsychological tests are provided for all trainees. The HNRP provides a unique training environment that maxim

Dietary counseling is recommended in the treatment of patients with hypertension as part of comprehensive management, however, there is no clinical trial comparing different levels of dietary counseling. A non-blinded, randomized, controlled clinical trial was carried out comparing the effects of dietary counseling provided by an investigator and dietitian with a self-managed diet on the course of blood pressure. The study population comprised 148 patients with mild to moderate hypertension and a mean age of 53 years. Patients were randomly assigned to 1 of 3 groups. Group 1 received no dietary counseling and continued to follow their usual diet; Group 2 received dietary counseling from an investigator; and Group 3 received dietary counseling from a dietitian. The effect of the dietary interventions was evaluated by comparing the changes in blood pressure, lipid levels and serum protein fractions from the beginning to the end of the study. The use of the investigator's dietary counseling was associated with a significantly greater decrease in mean diastolic blood pressure and a significantly greater increase in serum albumin and cholesterol compared to self-management of the diet. There were no significant differences between the group provided by the dietitian and the investigator group for any of the variables evaluated. Dietary counseling by a trained investigator can produce more effective results than the use of self-managed dietary advice. Stuart Wortmann of Life Boat Australia says there's an "un
