A pair of i8 electric hypercars have just arrived at the Sydney International Auto Show and wow us with their advanced driverless technology, although they won't make their Australian debut until the second half of next year. Backed by Germany's BMW Group, the automaker says the i8 will offer a “revolutionary level of driverless technology”. They will be available in 2019 as the i8s are being made in their Munich plant, with production limited to 999 per year worldwide
