Bing Travel for Outlook is a simple add-in for Microsoft Outlook that allows you to quickly research and book flights, hotels, and other travel-related products. The add-in works by accessing Bing's network of data sources, then evaluating those sources to determine when the best time to fly is, the best price for lodging, and for other travel products. The results are then shown in the Outlook Calendar. Bing Travel is built on the Live Search engine, providing you with access to the same quality and massive amounts of data that Live Search collects. This results in faster searches and better results, even when the information isn't explicitly stored in the Live Search database. Bing Travel for Outlook works great with Microsoft Exchange Server and works with Exchange 2010 and later. Bing Travel for Outlook is powered by the Bing Travel API, which is located here: How to install the Bing Travel for Outlook Add-in: To install the Bing Travel for Outlook Add-in: * From the Add-Ins menu, select Outlook > More Add-Ins. * Select the "Bing Travel for Outlook" item from the list. * Click the "Add to Outlook" button and follow the prompts. * When you finish installing the add-in, you may have to restart Outlook. How to find the Live Search results: Live Search uses Microsoft's information gathering technology to gather and gather and gather more data about your search queries. By entering your search query into Bing Search, Live Search can more accurately understand your query and offer you results. And with the Bing Travel add-in for Outlook, you can benefit from this technology whenever you search with Bing. The Bing Travel add-in for Outlook will keep a history of the search results so you can see the results each time you search, and see how the results have changed over time. Live Search returns results from sources around the Web, including your browser's history, Facebook and Twitter, your friends and family, and public sources, such as Wikipedia and Flickr. Microsoft and Live Search have invested many hours into updating Bing to provide the best search results for our customers. From the data it collects, Live Search forms a single giant, constantly-updated knowledge base of the Web. The Bing Travel add-in for Outlook uses this knowledge base, along with personal knowledge and Bing's own knowledge, to 09e8f5149f

The Great Barrier Reef is the largest structure built by living organisms in the world. The World Wildlife Fund (WWF) announced that the Great Barrier Reef will receive international protection status, putting it above that of the endangered species. The Great Barrier Reef is a place where numerous wildlife live. It is also called the 'Lungs of the World' because it is working as a perfect fertilizer for the surrounding area. It was also announced that marine species around the reef will be associated with higher natural food sources. However, a few areas of the reef will be destroyed for the sake of the construction of hotels and cruise ships, as well as to gather information and survey studies. It is expected that the new World Heritage area will provide a new habitat for wildlife that will lead to healthier
