uterine cavity were well-performed in this study. A disadvantage was the limited number of cases; this study was conducted in a single center. Also, patients received either LNG-IUS or combined contraceptive methods, which could affect the results, although this should not influence the main conclusion of this study. CONCLUSION

===== There is a decreasing trend in the number of patients with adnexal pathology, which can be explained by the well-performed treatment modalities. A statistically significant difference in the number of pregnancies between the two groups was not observed, as many of the patients were taking combined contraceptive methods. To our knowledge, this is the first study to evaluate adnexal pathology and reproductive outcome after a single-center study in Turkey. CONFLICTS OF INTEREST =====

The authors declare no conflicts of interest. Tributyltin induces apoptosis and cell cycle arrest in BALB/c 3T3 cells. The biological effects of tributyltin (TBT) on BALB/c 3T3 fibroblasts were investigated by examining the expression of the cell cycle regulatory proteins p21 and p53, and the apoptosis-associated proteins caspase-3, caspase-9, poly-ADP-ribose polymerase (PARP), and bcl-2. This study demonstrated that TBT induced a decrease in bcl-2 and an increase in caspase-3, caspase-9, PARP, and p53 expression in a dose- and time-dependent manner. Caspase-3, caspase-9, and PARP were activated in response to TBT in a concentration-dependent manner, and TBT-induced cleavage of PARP was observed by immunocytochemistry. Activation of caspase-9 and caspase-3 preceded PARP activation, and apoptosis was detected only when caspase-9 and caspase-3 were activated. The apoptotic response to TBT was found to be cell-type dependent. TBT at all concentrations tested induced a significant apoptotic response in BALB/c 3T3 cells,
