Stock Sector Monitor Download ----- *Replace this text with the direct link to the softwareOne year later, and certainly one month after the NFL draft, we're still waiting for a decision from the league on Seattle defensive lineman Brandon Mebane's trade demand. One might think that would be the last such demand the Seahawks would get. That wasn't the case. In fact, the Seahawks extended Mebane a new contract with a hefty raise and a lucrative new deal for 2013, and they thought they'd squelched his trade request. Not so. At the end of the season, Mebane told head coach Pete Carroll that he was retiring. Right or wrong, you'd have to agree that kind of reaction tells a coach he's no longer interested in being a Seahawk. So, in two different ways — the trade and the retirement — we now have a Mebane vs. Seattle situation on the docket. It's the first time we've seen this kind of thing with a Seahawks player since they dealt receiver Mike Williams to Carolina in 2011. Mebane is due a $1.6 million roster bonus on the fifth day of the regular season, and after that, he'll be on the books for $5.25 million per year. Having him locked up with a manageable cap hit after next season would allow the Seahawks to address some other areas of need, such as receiver. Mebane, who turned 34 in April, has missed a combined 28 games the past three seasons because of a back injury that was once thought to be career-threatening. He hadn't played a game since November 2011, and he has dealt with the pain in his back throughout the season. In those three seasons, Mebane has 348 tackles (109 solo), 17 sacks, 59 tackles for loss, eight forced fumbles and a fumble recovery. Imaging the amygdala in phobia: A systematic review.
