Dennis Quaid is ready to kill. The actor, who rose to fame through his portrayal of legal beagle Butch Cassidy in the 1980s TV series "Cheers," is set to star in "The Mule," a highly anticipated collaboration with the big-budget Warners film. The project, which will also star Chris Pine, opens in July 2019. The project follows a couple who hires a man (Quaid) to smuggle a corpse across the country in a metal coffin to be cremated in Florida. Quaid said he was thrilled to work with the studio, calling them a "dream studio." "I did a movie at Warner Bros. in 1989 called 'The Bottom Line,' which was a good family movie, and I was trying to do big movies, and they weren't being so receptive to me. So I thought, 'I'll do a small independent movie that they'll love and then I'll pounce on them,'" Quaid said. "When Warners came to me with this script, it just felt like my old studio again. And I think it's going to make an impact, I really do." Quaid said that it's important to film at "the right time" when there's demand for family-friendly movies. With films like "Men in Black," "The Hunger Games" and "Jurassic World" turning back in profit, Hollywood could be feeling the need to go "smaller," he said. "I don't think it's going to be people going to the movies to be disappointed. I think it's going to be a nice surprise." One of the more exciting aspects of the role was the diversity in the film. Quaid said the movie would be able to appeal to both kids and adults. "You're always having the kids in mind because I think they respond to it," he said. ◆
