The diabetic polyneuropathy which occurs in about 40% of patients with clinical diabetes mellitus has proven to be a devastating complication of diabetes mellitus. A suitable animal model for this disease is being sought so that protocols for treating the disease can be evaluated. Thus far, the islet cell tumours of the pancreas in the rat have proven to be the most sensitive experimental model for the study of the clinical diabetic neuropathy. It is my experience that the tight blood glucose control obtained in these rats can bring about neuropathy at levels of blood glucose far lower than obtainable by human patients. In the next few years, neuropathy will be produced in some of the over 700 surviving animals by carefully controlled glucose toxicity. The specific aims of this project are: (1) maintenance and characterization of the islet cell tumours of the pancreas in the rat by blood glucose level; (2) to establish a reproducible model for the study of neuropathy in the islet cell tumour rats by acute and chronic blood glucose levels; (3) to study neuropathy at blood glucose levels lower than those previously accessible; (4) to obtain a quantitative estimate of sensitivity to insulin as a function of the plasma insulin to glucose ratio; (5) to quantitate the degree of neuropathy produced by high blood glucose levels; (6) to characterize the electrophysiological abnormalities, and to correlate the degree of neuropathy with changes in nerve conduction velocity; (7) to determine the potential pathological effects of blood glucose toxicity in the central nervous system.

Residents of homes along the Severn Bridge in Flintshire were warned to move furniture away from the risk of flooding. The incident happened when 14,000 litres of water flooded the localised area. Flintshire Council's head of communications, Neil Walsh, said the city's fire department had been called out to rescue a couple's pet dog. It was reported to have been trapped in a first floor flat in an area known as Maelor which is close to the Welshpool-to-Machynlleth railway line. The flood was caused after a strong downpour on Thursday evening, but which was expected to dry up on Friday. Image copyright Reuters Image caption Flooding happened in the

When you are working with a brush, all of your actions are saved in a "history." You can use this history to undo operations, apply actions repeatedly, and remove any of the actions you apply. You can also add new actions to the history. To save time, try the following: Click the Brush icon in the Tools panel to open the Brush dialog box. Set the Mode to Scattering to retain the natural texture of the brush stroke. Change the Angle to 18 degrees, which is a good starting point for most of your brush strokes. Press the Zoom In button, which increases the size of the brush in the browser area. Press the Zoom Out button, which decreases the size of the brush in the browser area. Set the Size to About 13 pixels. Click the Base color icon to change the color of the brush. Try several different colors for different types of strokes. Set the Pressure to about 75. Click the Width icon to change the size of the brush. Click the Shading button to load the brush in the upper-left corner of the Brush dialog box. Click the Erase icon to erase the brush's colors. Create a New Brush To create a new brush, follow these steps: Click the Brush icon in the Tools panel to open the Brush dialog box. In the Type drop-down menu, select Creating a new brush.
