Radical radical homolysis Radical radical homolysis (RRH) is a chemical reaction in which a free radical, is homolyzed to an alkene radical, : The homolysis is balanced by spin inversion. The RRH rearrangement has been described as analogous to the reaction of a free radical with a nucleophilic agent like hydrogen sulfide: Once radical atoms have rearranged to form alkene radicals, they are unreactive for many chemical purposes. The alkene radicals are very stable and can react with themselves and form new radicals, and may also react with other chemicals to form other alkene radicals.
