I made a tool to automate the process: Easier method: You can manually edit the installed.assmb.xml file in the application directory. Simply delete all lines from. In-system update of the app on your iPhone by going to Download: Extract the ezx.zip file. Edit installed.assmb.xml using a text editor. Replace all occurrences of. with a backslash (\). Saved as installed.assmb.xml Go to Phone App Store, purchase the app. Re-download the app from the App Store. It should work now. Q: Why does `visually-selectable()` work and `visually-selected()` not? I have tried to find a good explanation of the difference between visually-selectable() and visually-selected() in any document I can find, but none I have found do a great job explaining it (neither do I understand it perfectly). In short: Both functions select and visually select elements. But visually-selectable() works, visually-selected() does not. function toggle_visibility(element) { if(element.style.display == "none") element.style.display = "block"; else element.style.display = "none"; element.style.visibility = "visible"; } $("#hidden").visually-selectable(); $("#hidden").visually-selected(); Why? A: To add to the comment by @zerkms, this is because visually-selected() is not widely supported in browsers. It is a syntax error in some browsers, and an error in some browsers when it is actually supported. visually-selected() is a W3C recommendation that says: The value must be a Boolean, either false or true, indicating whether or not the corresponding element is visibly selected. and visually-selected() is an example of the 54b84cb42d
