Q: Will having a PC workstation improve performance when using a MacPro? I have an MacPro and use a PC workstation, when drawing with my Cintiq. Obviously my workstation will be doing everything except doing the drawing. I will boot into windows on my workstation but I will be saving files in an imac environment. As i am an early user of Apple products, I only used a workstation while learning how the basic Apple products work. I am of the opinion that once I gain more experience, I will start running everything on the laptop. Will having a PC workstation actually reduce performance? A: You might have the choice of using different drivers and software provided by Apple. All things being equal - yes it will reduce performance. It would also mean you need different drivers and software for the iMac to make sure everything works well. I would recommend getting a second machine with less processing power and running it off a display attached to the iMac.
