Appreciate the hard job not only Irina this, but also I added the hard job on the front foot of Daphne for sure, and sometimes a large percentage of share of the young ladies with no power, it is very tough. The girls, they did not mind and these girls have already been to the factory, you are familiar with the whole process of production, how you can feel, they have already been there, they already know. But the other thing is, I feel, at least, the young ladies themselves, they are really looking forward to it, and they actually dream that it becomes a permanent job, you know, many, many girls, young, many young girls, can never hope to get out of their jobs. If you move, you can move, and if you are

Yvm Daphne 9yo Irina 12yo} 16 -- a757f658d7 ..Stereotype threat Stereotype threat, or stereotype threat effect, describes the negative effect that certain schemas or stereotypes can have on performance for certain groups or people with a particular identity. Positive stereotypes about one's group can lead to performance benefits, whilst negative stereotypes lead to performance deficits. Such a scenario may have impact on academic achievement and various other areas of life. Stereotypes and stereotypes threat Stereotypes are social group categories that people hold about groups of individuals. Stereotypes can be positive, negative or neutral. Positive stereotypes (e.g., "Teachers are nice to students") can help individuals to make positive judgments of groups of people. Stereotypes can be actively used in a positive manner. In contrast, negative stereotypes lead individuals to categorize themselves and others negatively. People's level of stereotyping can vary by group membership, and have been observed in adults and children. Stereotypes can be used to make fast judgments about individuals. Such stereotypes are often referred to as stereotypes, in contrast to "descriptions" or "facts" of the individual being stereotyped. Stereotypes can easily come to mind when individuals are presented with groups of individuals of a different gender, race or other group. Many people generalize about entire groups of people in this manner. If a certain group is the target of negative stereotypes, such as the Japanese, those in the group will feel that way. The experience of being negatively stereotyped can lead to performance deficits, such as anxiety, for the individual being stereotyped. According to the stereotype threat model, individuals will feel threatened by learning situations that are stereotypically associated with their group, as these will lead to negative perceptions of their abilities. Students who are reminded of their gender or who experience stereotype threat in a learning situation are not capable of performing to the same standard as those with no such history. This effect is illustrated by the following hypothetical experiment. In the first condition, students will be told that the category of interest is winter sports. In this case, the students were all women. In the second condition, the category is winter sports and the students are mostly men. The performance of the women in the second condition

At the end she takes a call from her daughter, who threatens to complain to their son's teacher. A teacher asked her: 'Do you think there is a big difference between male and female (children)?' The teacher says: 'I don't know, a lot of teachers believe that the boys are the ones who are more aggressive than the girls.' She adds: 'About half of the boys tend to be more aggressive than the girls.' The class chose to draw animals because it was one of the easiest subjects to learn and draw.

With such an easy subject, how could we pass? The teacher allowed us to repeat a picture three times and gave us the option to redo the original drawing. We chose to redo the original drawing. We chose to redo the original drawing. We chose to redo the original drawing. I chose to redo the original drawing. I chose to redo the original drawing. I chose to redo the original drawing. We drew each animal on the board and the teacher looked at it and choose the one she liked best. We were told that the drawing was fake as well and we had to repeat the drawing without talking. We repeated our drawing three times. I chose to redo the original drawing. We chose to redo the original drawing. The teacher returned our drawings and we were given a pencil and pastel. My teacher
