Q: Symfony localization - command pattern I'm using Symfony 2.1 and I want to implement localization. My problem is that I don't know what is the best way to implement it. I have English texts in the database and I want them to be displayed in an English website. I don't have French texts in the database and I want them to be displayed in a French website. Obviously I don't want to create two websites in English and French. It would be really overkill if I had to create two websites. I want to create just one website in two languages. For example, I have "Hello there" and I want to display it in English or French. Is there a way to implement localization inside my app but so I can change the language without changing the entire website? A: Symfony ships with two annotations that can help you with that: translation (entry, in the context of a bundle) translation_comment (entry in the context of a bundle) Example: translate({entry}, [parameters]) [Anatomical study of the arterial-venous section of the bronchial circulation]. What did you say? What did they say? How do you finish the conversation? In this edition of Biznez Now, we are taking a look at the pros and cons of a fictional book called "Search and you shall find...: The official help book for the mighty Search Engine from Google. The English version of the search engine was first launched in July of 1998. It was the first powerful search engine of its kind. But it didn't take long for others to follow. After all, the popularity of the internet had already taken off and companies couldn't help but be tempted to jump on the bandwagon. Some of these companies are Yahoo, Microsoft and Ask. As you can see, the original search engine is now obsolete and is considered to be a relic. But what about those books from Google? Here are some of the highlights: 1. English is the official language. 2. Google has "digital libraries" all around the world. 3. It is also "free to join". 4. It is currently the world's number one search engine. 5. Google will crawl up to 40% of the internet within 24 hours. 6. If it can't find an answer, it can look for images and create a "better answer". 7. Google has "factual knowledge" about the world. 8. It has "a base of power". 9. It is "searched for". 10. It has "know-how". Well, here is a question for you. How long do you think it will take for others to catch up to Google? Here is an article that you can check out from Yahoo News. It talks about how many books is being sold and reviewed by Amazon. Below is an excerpt from the article. The first of these announcements is the sequel to the popular online multiplayer game, "Infinity Ward's Call of Duty: Black Ops 3". Activision has announced that the next entry of the Call of Duty series will be making it's way to the new consoles. The game will run on "Xbox One and PS4" The game, confirmed to run on the new consoles, was announced at the Sony press conference on Thursday with Senior Vice President of Gaming at Activision, Eric Hirschberg, and Senior Vice President of Marketing at Sony, Doug Dohmen being present at the press conference. The game will be published by Activision and will come out this holiday season. The tech press at VG247 had the opportunity to speak to Design Director, Mark Rubin. What Mark Rubin had to say was something for both the Xbox One and PS4 owners. He discussed the sacrifices that will be made on the Xbox One, but he did make it clear that it will be a "good" sacrifice. "The team is working on both [box]. This year we're making sure the game works on both. Not that it's necessarily a feature that's easy to achieve - it's a real testament to the team. And we're throwing in new experiences, additional maps and modes." It should be noted that the general consensus of both the Xbox One and PS4 owners seems to be that both are pretty powerful gaming machines. Mark Rubin continued to stress the importance of the next entry to the Call of Duty franchise stating: "We've got to
