Letter From the Editor We have recently received the following letter from Helen Emms. In a recent article in Volume 71 number 2, of High Beam Magazine I was recommended to reread the novel “The Lady Vanishes” by Gwen Gilson, first published in 1921. Like the Russian icon-painter Christian Gorky, she is described by Stephen Herbert as “the high priestess of English literature.” It’s a favourite of mine. I read it again a couple of years ago. It’s a very enjoyable read, perhaps because of its simple, breezy and laconic style. This is reinforced by the atmosphere of English provincialism, which is not actually a description of any English town or region, but was immortalised by P.G. Wodehouse's Jeeves. This vision of England is then enriched by the story of a group of boarding-school girls waiting in a hotel while their friend is away on a music exam in London, and being gradually drawn into the web of crooked, deceitful and amoral people who surround them. This is a very readable novel, with plots and mysteries unfolding at a steady pace, with characters you care about. It resonates with the era when it was written, but also introduces a world that we are still part of to this day. If you'd like to learn more about this, or any of Gwen Gilson's other novels, you could read Gwen's on-line biography, but just because you read a novel like this, doesn't mean you have to take it with you. It will survive in your brain. The same could be said of most novels. We don't really need reading them, do we? If you
