This study demonstrates that cAMP potentiates the effect of insulin on induction of the MHC gene product, the H-2Kb class I molecule. This effect is manifest as a synergistic increase in the overall inducibility of this gene by both cAMP and insulin. In addition, cAMP abolishes the inhibitory effect of insulin in non-stimulated lymphoid cells. The synergistic induction of MHC gene expression by cAMP and insulin is mediated through distinct pathways. In the case of the MHC gene, both the cAMP- and insulin-mediated pathways are activated through the intracellular adenylate cyclase pathway. In contrast, the two pathways appear to be independently regulated in the case of IL-2 production. These observations are consistent with the hypothesis that the cAMP-mediated potentiation of insulin is a general mechanism that regulates cellular inducible gene expression, and that this effect is mediated through the generation of a downstream ligand or intracellular signal.Q: How to fetch all dependencies from ALL the versions of a single dependency? I have 2 questions, first is what does "- " in the following code mean? Fetching all the versions of a single dependency in a build file and the 2nd one is what does the 0.1 do in the dependency name (e.g. com.networknt:components-1.1.3)? dependencies { compile 'com.networknt:components-1.1.3:1.0.0' } A: That line is used to specify which version of the dependency, or a specific version of the dependency, to use. As mentioned by @Vivek Jain, there are many different versioning schemes in the different Android releases. For example, in Android 4.1 and later versions, version numbers are prefixed with "X.X", where X is a major version and X.X is the specific version of the major version
