It seems these days that the term 'bioprocessing' is being used to describe pretty much anything. Perhaps it's time we started calling these technologies 'bioaers', to not only highlight what's new, but also to remind ourselves that the first and last concept must be the same. That is, the ability to grow living organisms on an industrial scale, as a sustainable and reliable source of food, feed, fertilizer, medicines, and other products. This article appeared in Volume 15, Issue 1 of EPSO's Production & Utilization of Biotechnology newsletter. The present invention relates to a vacuum cleaner, and in particular, to a deep-cleaning vacuum cleaner for cleaning carpeted surfaces, such as walls, floors, and furniture. At the present time, many consumer vacuum cleaners utilize a beater bar mounted at the end of a rotating handle. These vacuum cleaners have a nozzle that is caused to vibrate to dislodge dirt and dust, and in many cases are equipped with a rotating brush for loosening and further dislodging the dust and dirt. These conventional vacuum cleaners are, for the most part, very effective at cleaning ordinary vacuumed up dust and dirt. However, for cleaning heavier debris, such as dirt and dust that has become embedded in carpets or rug pile, or difficult-to-reach furniture or sofas, the dirt and dust must often be removed by hand with an abrasive cleaning brush. In addition, even where brush cleaning is not needed, the difficulty of cleaning carpeted surfaces may result in the need for repeated vacuum cleaning, which can be extremely inconvenient, especially if the carpeted surfaces are to be replaced by another carpet. 595f342e71
