* `` * `` * `` * `` # Type 1 vs. Type 2: Understanding Photoshop's Layers Photoshop has two types of layers: _type 1_ and _type 2_. Type 1 layers are also called _raster layers_, while type 2 layers are also called _vector layers_. Type 1 layers are actually editable: You can paint and draw on them, and you can use the erase tool to remove elements. Type 2 layers, on the other hand, are bitmap layers. When you create them, you're creating a _bitmap_, or binary data. They're not editable; you can't draw or paint on them. The effects you add are instead applied as a pattern to existing pixels. Photoshop stores all of your type 1 and type 2 layers as raster images; it doesn't actually store the vector or bitmap data that's created within the layers. Now, if you've ever been confused about what type of layer you're working on, this might be an explanation of what's going on. The reason the layers appear to be the same is because Photoshop has so many options to transform and apply effects to your layers that they just appear as a smeared-out version of what's stored in the layer. However, the different types of layers are stored inside the Photoshop file differently and therefore behave differently. * * * Photoshop 8 and later have _sub-layers_, which are actually either type 1 or type 2 depending on where you place them. In the following exercise, you're going to take a look at the various layers available to you and how you can control how those layers behave and be used. * * *

Dodge and Burn Dodge and Burn can be used to increase, decrease, or completely remove shadows and highlights from an image, or fix details that have been lost due to a low-light situation. Dodge, as the name implies, increases the contrast of a region on an image. Burn, the opposite of Dodge, decreases the contrast of a region on an image. The Burn command is usually held down with the ⌘ button on the keyboard. Dodge and Burn tools can also be found in the Layer toolbox, which can be opened by selecting Layer from the Tools menu and choosing Dodge and Burn. Layer > Adjustment Layer > Hue/Saturation The Hue/Saturation adjustment layer in Photoshop gives you a way to change the color in an image without destroying it. It is especially useful for when you want to take advantage of the color variation of your brand colors. These tools can be found in the Layer Adjustment Layers palette, under the Adjustments tab. The Hue/Saturation tools, along with the Adjustment Layer's Layer Mask, allow you to gradually change the color of an entire layer by dragging its color slider. Layer > Layer Mask > Apply Layer Mask The Layer Mask and layers that use it are a great way to add or hide elements on a page without affecting the others. You need to use the Add Layer Mask icon, located at the bottom of the Layers window, to create a Layer Mask for a layer. The Layer Mask can be used to alter the image's background or highlights as well as its foreground. You can also use this tool to change the foreground color. Layer masks are one way to give your images different effects and colors. Type The Type tool allows you to change the font used on a layer. This can be very useful when you want to change the font of a block of text, or when you want to type in the content of a file. You need to use the Type tool to create an object with the text cursor then type in some text. You can change the font on objects made with the Type tool, such as text, images, and shapes. Text The Text tool is used to create text on a layer, including text boxes, font information, and drop shadows. You create text using the Text tool by clicking and dragging the text cursor on a layer and then typing in some text. You can also crop any of the text boxes that have
