The specific aims of this proposal are to: (1) determine the change in blood flow, blood pressure, and heart rate during and following blood flow blockade with a right heart bypass circuit (RHCB) system (2) determine the appropriate time for patent ductus closure in an animal model when the PDA is open either by a RHCB, balloon angioplasty (BA), or by surgical ligation (BL); and (3) determine the response to exercise and pharmacologic (Nifedipine) treatment in a baboon model before and after patent ductus closure in utero. To accomplish these aims, the RHCB system will be used to mimic interventional procedures for cyanotic congenital heart disease, but also in a modified form for ductus arteriosus. Experimental animals will include normal baboons. Functional studies will be done by pulmonary artery pressure measurements, pulmonary vascular resistance, heart rate, and blood flow studies. The animals will be studied during normal ventilation, occlusion of the right ventricle, and during and following right vent
