Contents: Table of Contents: This guide was written by Jeremy Duncalfe, a former web designer for the BBC, and has been a part of the SitePoint Community for over three years. He has run a personal website since 1995, has written columns for Freesheets.com, and was recently made a member of the SitePoint Advisory Board. He also likes taking pictures of vegetables. When I created my web gallery for the BBC some years ago, I threw the usual mix of cheap and expensive visual effects together to give a rich and varied experience for viewers of the site. It's one of my proudest achievements and now I'm back using it to showcase photos of my upcoming baby, Avery, as I'm starting to plan for her arrival. Because the photos and video I upload to the web are all presented as 3-D images, requiring the user to rotate in 3D space rather than simply move through them, you'll see areas of interest in the gallery – such as a close-up on the face of a baby – displaying their orientation in front of their surroundings. Photoshop made this process rather easier but I still found the coding quite tricky to figure out and fiddled around with some plugins which probably didn't help, as I've not used them in quite a while. Not knowing what I was doing ended up with hundreds of hours of confusion. Photoshop Elements When you open Photoshop Elements, you're greeted with your most important graphic programs. This is Photoshop, you've probably already guessed. Left-clicking anywhere in this screen will open the image you are on in Photoshop and switching between the programs takes you to the programs to which you've been working. Right-clicking the active program will tell you your work area within that program. At the bottom of the right-hand-side of the screen are the tools for elements which will be familiar to anyone who has used Photoshop before - all the basic tools of black and white, copy, paste, clone, image rotations, and most of the more advanced tools such as Levels. Photoshop Elements has a unique set of tools. There is a large and clear toolbox at the top which is packed full of tools, rather than the smaller and confusing toolbox of Photoshop. There are over 200 tools in Photoshop, but the number is under 350 in 388ed7b0c7

BOLINGBROOK, Ill. — Ah, the joy of the really good games. So simple, so pure, so sweet. That's what you can taste in the Bolingbrook Magic (6-4) at this time of the year. And you can taste it in Monday night's game against the Rockford Mad Ants (2-8). "We're going to have to come out there and play our best game," said Magic coach Michael O'Shea. The Mad Ants are coming off a game against the Joliet Slammers (2-6) that ended with a 38-0 shutout — the biggest in the league in 2015. "They're a hard-nosed team, they're physical, they're well-coached and they're explosive," said O'Shea. "They're going to give us a fight. We've got to play our best game if we want to win." Bolingbrook, which averages about 20 points a game, has proven to be a tough team to beat. The Magic have won 14 of their last 16 games, including three in a row. "I think we've had a lot of good moments this year," said center Michael Alvarez, who has played center all season and is a major reason why the Magic are currently second in the league with 37 goals and is tied for first with a plus-22 in the statistical category that measures plus-minus, plus or minus. "We just have to keep the focus and keep playing the way we've been playing." Top scoring defenseman Julian Perez said, "Right now, it's better to win in the playoffs than in the regular season because we know what kind of team we are. We've got to carry that into the playoffs because we're not happy with the way we've been playing." Perez said, "I don't think any team can really be super confident until we lose a game." Alvarez said, "We've just got to stick with what we're doing — and that's what the coaches have been preaching to us." If

The world's top wind-power promoters are trying to push through big tax cuts for this country - saying it will encourage further investment in wind power and help it compete with solar in the long-term. But the plan has come under attack because taxpayers have been excluded and there's little evidence that wind energy will be any cheaper if governments cut the rates. The Federal Government's energy white paper will be released on June 2. It is expected to outline a plan to cut the cost of renewables, at a time when wind farms cost around $2 billion a wind farm and coal-fired power stations are estimated to generate electricity at 50¢ a kilowatt hour. In July, a major wind park on the Darling Downs in south-east Queensland will be connected to the grid and be paid about $30 million.
