The python was discovered Friday by a farmer with his four dogs after it was found tangled in barbed wire between his property and his neighbor's in the Bethanga pastoral area in the mid-north of South Australia, about 2,500 kilometers (1,600 miles) north of Adelaide, the state's capital. The python is about 9 meters (30 feet) long and weighed an estimated 5.5 kilograms (12 pounds). Its head is bigger than a human's and it has 11 vertebrae, including one at the top called the occipital condyle. After the farmer found the snake, he called his neighbor, who had seen the massive snake, South Australian Parks and Wildlife Services said in a statement. Typically, such cleaning implements include a tank or reservoir having a squeegee-like element affixed to the bottom portion of the reservoir. Typically, a cleaning fluid is placed into the tank or reservoir. A user of the cleaning implement squeezes the mop to transfer the cleaning fluid to a surface to be cleaned. There are numerous types of cleaning fluids available. Some of the more commonly used fluids include cleaning oils and other scouring liquids. Once the liquid is transferred to the surface to be cleaned, it tends to run off of the surface. To avoid this, the cleaning implements have a number of drainage holes located along the bottom of the mop. The drainage holes allow the liquid to drain through the mop when the user squeezes the mop during cleaning. To reduce the likelihood that the cleaning fluid will drip through the drainage holes, the drainage holes typically are located further from the edge of the mop than the edges of the remaining portion of the mop. However, this location of the drainage holes does not completely avoid the possibility of dripping. An additional problem with known mops is that the bottom section of the mop is typically round. It would be advantageous to provide a mop having a more square or rectangular shaped bottom section. It would further be advantageous to provide a mop that has drainage holes spaced further from the edges of the mop. Q: Unable to delete all data at time
