La Fonte Des Neiges (2009) - Burdusches [Broschüsse] - Sans Titre [Francaise. 30:13; 5 years ago. Plasma catecholamines and glycocorticoids in obese women with hypothalamic amenorrhea. Hypothalamic amenorrhea was characterized in nine obese women with a disturbed hypothalamic control of gonadotropic and lactotropic functions. The biosynthetic and metabolic properties of catecholamines and glycocorticoids were investigated in comparison with nine age- and weight-matched eumenorrheic controls. Plasma and urinary catecholamines were determined by a sensitive, specific and precise radioenzymatic assay. In the basal state, concentrations of norepinephrine were lower in the amenorrheic women (0.42 +/- 0.14 ng/ml, mean +/- S.E.M.) than in the controls (1.19 +/- 0.22 ng/ml; p less than 0.01). Plasma metanephrines and urinary 3-methoxy-4-hydroxyphenyl glycol were clearly lower in the amenorrheic group. There was no difference in plasma corticosteroid concentrations between the groups. These observations indicate that impaired catecholamine metabolism may be involved in the pathogenesis of the hypothalamic amenorrhea. Inspiring new generation of scientists through a master's degree in aging and gerontology. BAGRAM BAGHDAD, Iraq - In an ongoing competition to recruit the best young Iraqi scholars, the University of Baghdad (UOB) recently launched a one-year master's degree in aging and gerontology. The program is targeted at the large number of Iraqi scholars interested in their country's aging population and the opportunities they can provide for their future development. "Since we launch our first course in July 2018, the number of participants has been growing quickly," said Mahmood Mohsen, dean of the University's Faculty of Economics and Administrative Sciences. "I was very happy to see our first round of students turn out to be very successful; they all have outstanding academic standing and good preparation, which enabled them to reach the top five in the grading process. The second class of graduates is currently preparing for the fourth round of application
