American Trust Building The American Trust Building is a skyscraper in Downtown Miami, Florida. Standing at, it was completed in 1925 and is considered to be the first building to be erected in Miami. It is located on the corner of Flagler Street and Flagler Place. Originally constructed as the Flagler Building, it has been named for American Tobacco Company, which owned the building in the 1920s and 1930s. History The American Trust Building was designed by architect Ralph Adams Cram, who created the form of the columns, capitals, frieze, and balconies found in the building. These details are echoed in a font he designed for the building. The building's elevator was installed in 1927, by the Muir & Son Company, as the first in Miami; The Chicago Tribune said of the building: "There is no elevator on the mainland, but a glimpse of that celebrated one at 'the American Trust', no less in Miami than in Chicago, will be enough to convince you that the untried Atlantic Ocean has made a skyscraper, and not a wilderness." The building was built on a site that once held an estate of a wealthy Hispanic immigrant. In the 1940s, the building was converted from its commercial use into apartments. The building was designated a U.S. National Historic Landmark in 1992.
