Q: How to have mySQL query user input of month and year for a date but still work? Im a noob to php and some of the topics I have come across in the past required the date to be set with whatever I'm wanting to use through mySQL. I have the dates set for the following query but the query doesnt work..Im not that knowledgeable in MySQL queries, it's just a beginners guide I was reading about "year month" values. $d = $_POST['date1']; $m = $_POST['date2']; $q = "SELECT COUNT() FROM friends WHERE user1 = '$id' and user2 = '$_SESSION[$sessionName]' and date1 = '$d'"; $r = mysqli_query($connection, $q); $num = mysqli_fetch_assoc($r); $conf = $num["COUNT()"]; The date values are strings and they look like "7/21/2011" or "09/21/2011". I tried using quotes, no dice. I tried using apostrophes and no dice. Any suggestions or help would be appreciated! A: Date() is your friend SELECT C

What's New In?

In an internal combustion engine, engine oil passing through an engine oil gallery is used as an effective coolant of an oil cooler. The interior of the engine oil gallery is in communication with the exterior of the engine oil gallery through a plurality of oil galleries. When the oil temperature is low, such oil galleries are blocked by rain water, mud, etc. in a high-temperature season and when the oil temperature is high, such oil galleries are opened. Since the oil gallery temperature is high, the engine oil is heated by heat transferred to the oil gallery. The heated engine oil is supplied to a cylinder block through a plurality of oil galleries and the heated oil is supplied to a head gasket for air sealing the cylinder chamber (refer to the first prior art of JP-A-2008-196284). When the engine oil temperature is high, the engine oil is warmed and its viscosity decreases. Then, there is a possibility that the engine oil leaks outside. To prevent this problem, the opening of the oil gallery is blocked while the engine oil temperature is high and the engine oil is prevented from leaking outside. However, as the engine oil temperature becomes lower, the viscosity of the oil increases and the oil leaks outside if the oil gallery is not blocked while the engine oil temperature is low.
