TORONTO — Canada's largest private employer has reversed its recent decision to require workers to wear a mask while on the job after a public backlash. The union representing approximately 40,000 Sun Life Financial employees says the company decided to reverse the mask requirement because of public pressure. It says people began to wear masks to work in order to be more socially acceptable and because of the growing Canadian usage of masks on public transit. A Sun Life spokesperson says the company maintains the requirement for employees to wear masks in the workplace. Representatives from that company are scheduled to speak to the public at a news conference this morning. Sun Life is the largest employer in Canada with more than 30,000 employees. — Follow @MarkJGrant on Twitter

A prospective clinical study using a single technique of silicon impression material for the fabrication of metal-ceramic and metal-polyethylene crowns in a single appointment. To compare the accuracy of metal-ceramic and metal-polyethylene crowns using a single impression technique. Forty crown preparations were made in ten molar units on four stainless steel crown test casts. Each crown preparation was made using a silicon impression material, and the casts were then mounted in an intraoral surveyor. The cast crowns were divided into two groups, metal-ceramic and metal-polyethylene (n = 20), and a final impression was made using a single technique. All final crowns were fabricated in a single appointment. Data were collected for occlusal and marginal fit (based on proportional and absolute marginal error
