Many of the figures I'm looking at are already pulling in a large sum of money. Although a single figure might not look like a lot if it's built for all the world to see, when you take into account all of the costs and time it takes to put the company together, it becomes a substantial sum. And when you spread out the cost of the show over a number of years, the rewards tend to become more tangible. However, there is one figure that seems to have become known as the 'king of the kings', and that is the figure for Michael Denny. For the past four or five years Denny has become one of the most prolific collectors in the UK. Yes, with figures like the Silver Alpha and the Battle Alpha, he has seen his list of 'babies', but that's only a small part of the story. Over the past three years Denny has built up a body of work that is making all the other collectors feel very envious of his 'baby' list, and yes, there is a financial element to that list, but that's only part of the picture. It's my belief that Denny knows that Michael is the best figure ever made (not that I'm biased or anything), but he's realised that working with the best tool is the route to personal greatness. Michael is the first figure made with a new, improved tool. It's the first fully jointed, articulated, 20-inch figure, and the first figure that is so good in both the new tool and the old tool that it was widely regarded as the best figure ever made. The figure also has the best sculpt on any figure in history, a figure that ranks up there with the likes of the Alpha, the Golden, the Silver, all the Marauders, and many more. Michael also ranks up there with Hinchcliffe in terms of a market presence, a reputation as one of the best collectibles in the world, and above all that, the way that he has been able to diversify his product range from a purely military subject, to one that features some of the best if not the best Britains in history. And the main element with Michael is that he doesn't only put something together that is good; he puts something together that is exceptionally good. What he does with this product range is a huge

With the development of mobile communication technologies, early progress in standards of long term evolution (LTE) of 3rd generation partnership project (3GPP) is expected. In addition to voice communication, the LTE system also supports various wireless data services such as mobile web surfing, online gaming, file transfer, and the like. Long term evolution advanced (LTE-A) is an evolution standard improvement of the LTE, with backward compatibility to the LTE and with enhanced backward compatibility to the previous communication system. Corresponding system architecture of the LTE-A is shown in FIG. 1. As shown in FIG. 1, the major components of the LTE-A system are: an evolved universal terrestrial radio access network (E-UTRAN) 100 and a core network (CN) 103. The E-UTRAN 100 includes evolved Node Bs (eNBs) 101, and the CN 103 includes a mobility management entity (MME) 102, a serving gateway (S-GW) 104, and a packet gateway (P-GW) 105. A user equipment (UE) 101 is a terminal, and a base station is a transmit-receive unit that communicates with the user equipment. The user equipment may be one of the devices such as mobile phones, laptop, tablet, personal digital assistant (PDA), and the like, and the base station may be one of the devices such as home eNB (HeNB), repeater, and the like. The mobility management entity is a node that manages mobility context (for example, location, time) of the user equipment. The serving gateway is a node that controls processing of data transmission or reception of the user equipment. The packet gateway terminates the user-plane tunnel, and terminates and carries sessions of paging in the user-plane. In the prior art, in order to be compatible to the LTE system, all the control channels of the LTE system need to be included into the LTE-A system. For example, a control channel of a physical random access channel (PRACH) of the LTE system is a physical uplink control channel (PUCCH). The physical uplink control channel can be defined to control data transmission of the user equipment in the LTE system. In the LTE-A system, a control channel of the user equipment includes a physical uplink shared channel (PUSCH) and a physical uplink control channel (PUCCH). The physical uplink shared channel is used for uplink data transmission, and the
