Q: Passing GET request query parameters to the url in angular 2 I have a GET request method which should create a new item in my database. this.http.get("/api/employees?id=" + this.employee.id) I am getting a success http call response, however the payload is null and i need to pass the id query parameters. I tried it like this: this.http.get("/api/employees?id=${this.employee.id}"); A: You need to quote the values in the request. Change your code to: this.http.get("/api/employees?id=" + "${this.employee.id}"); Fiddle: Q: How do I use the built-in AMI DMVS to track the hit points of animals? The build-in DMVS function in several simulation packages is usually the simplest and most accurate way to track animal damage. Is there a way to use the built-in DMVS and several functions to track hit points, etc. of animals in a physically correct way? (specifically, for the purpose of understanding whether player characters make target dice rolls for predators on a 1-or-2) A: The DMVS system is designed to apply as little lag to game frames as possible. For example, when you are making skill checks, there are a lot of maths calculations being done and the DMVS picks the correct ones to apply to the relevant frame. However, to do damage, it's a different thing. There's a bunch of maths, but the answer isn't necessarily available immediately. Usually the game needs a few frames to give that answer. For example, if you have a projectile flying through space, the hit point table needs to search through a table of objects and find the right one. Similarly, when you need to roll a d20 to hit a target, the table needs to search through all the objects in the table of dice to find the dice it needs to roll against. All of those activities take time, and the DMVS is designed to be very quick. To
