Rat brain phospholipid fatty acid composition was determined in vitamin E-deficient and -supplemented animals. To assess potential effects of vitamin E deprivation, groups of rats were fed for 2 weeks on the following dites: a basal (low) vitamin E diet (10 mg alpha-tocopherol/kg diet). Bosal vitamin E diet supplemented with either 40 or 80 mg/kg diet (basal plus vitamin E). For the study of effects of vitamin E supplementation, groups of rats were fed on the basal vitamin E diet supplemented diets (basal plus vitamin E diet on possition of phospholipids determined by gas-liquid chromatography. The significance of the data was assessed by analysis of variance and comparison between pairs of groups. The results showed hat brain phospholipid fatty acid composition was dependent upon the concentrations of polyunsaturated fatty acids and particularly the concentration of linoleic acid. There were significant differences between groups of rats i
