A student studying image manipulation through the use of Photoshop. (Image: Hemingway Images/Getty) Inkscape is a free open-source vector graphics editor that provides many of the same basic features as Photoshop such as placing graphics elements (text, shapes, and images) and applying effects. Inkscape supports most common image formats as well as printing. Like Photoshop, Inkscape uses the layer-based editing system. This means that you can create and manipulate multiple layers of effects, and select and adjust each one independently. Unlike Photoshop, there are no "raster effects" in Inkscape. This means that unlike Photoshop, you cannot apply text, photos, or illustration to an image. However, all the individual layers are editable and thus you can make a lot of powerful effects with Inkscape without having to layer them. The following two articles explain both Photoshop and Inkscape and teach students how to use

The world of graphic design and illustration has changed significantly since the first versions of Photoshop launched in 1987. Therefore, Adobe Photoshop Elements is a great choice for hobbyists who are looking to learn graphic design or illustration. Like all editing software, you will find yourself spending a lot of time editing images on top of Photoshop. Therefore, it is important that you have the best edition software for your business. But which Photoshop alternative is the best, and what are the differences between them? Here are the seven best Photoshop alternatives for you. Dramatically reduce file sizes with RawTherapee. RawTherapee is a powerful software which lets you open RAW (RAW) files from professional and high-end digital cameras. What is the Raw file format? It is the generic name given to raw images captured by professional cameras like the Nikon D4. It is much smaller than JPEG image files and is usually converted to a JPEG image to be viewed. RAW is useful for professional photographers who want to customise or make adjustments to their images, and for independent designers who want to make use of all the benefits provided by high-end cameras such as super-high resolution images with the capacity to preserve more details. Why would I use a RAW file? A RAW file is often larger than the JPEG version of the same image, but it preserves more information than the processed JPEG image, making it a much higher quality and larger file. This means that you can save less time editing, and have more time for other tasks. It also means that you will have fewer file sizes, making your file sizes smaller and easier to share on social media. Other advanced uses of RAW file include: More intricate adjustments to the picture. More flexibility when creating artistic effects. More detailed and better quality images. Although you have to invest more time and effort in editing and creating RAW images, it is an invaluable alternative to the standard JPEG format. Description The EU-wide suspension of the imposition of the NIRITS EID biosecurity risk mitigation measure for smallholder pigs will have a beneficial impact on many Irish producers. They are among those who have submitted declarations to the Irish Government stating that they will not be able to meet the industry standard of thirty piglets being produced each litter. Unlike the EU as a whole, Ireland will be able to provide significant incentives for its smallholders who will be permitted to produce up to two litters of pigs which would otherwise be classified as animal by-products in the United States. The positive effect of this early lifting will be enhanced by a new EU measure, the Permit-Based Obligation Scheme which will compensate EU producers, after the initial lifting is complete, for the production of up to four litters. Regardless of any EU or Irish incentive, Irish pig farmers have been eager to produce additional litters since the introduction of the NIRITS EID risk mitigation measure. The new measure has been in place since January 2017, but pig producers have only had access to it in recent weeks. This recognition of this international request will encourage Irish pig farmers to release more piglets, even though they have been kept back to maintain compliance with national and international norms. For companies that are looking to sell Irish pig by-products, this could mean greater supply at a price that has been higher than it otherwise would be. However, competitors in other countries are unlikely to be able to take advantage of the Irish lifting. This is because the US will not have the same flexibility as is currently available for the Irish pig industry. Exports of pig by-products to the US are currently restricted by the "meat parity" regulations which are set by the USDA. These regulations restrict producers to a small minimum production level (around eight litters) before US producers are able to receive compensation. The result is that, before the decision to allow the Irish lifting was taken, US producers were forced to produce piglets at a much higher price. Proprietors of breeding herds and commercial enterprises that are currently not able to meet the NIRITS EID restriction to 30 pigs in a litter are expected to see the price of feed costs decline. It will be necessary, however, for them to continue to produce a positive return from their investment. With the lifting of the NIRITS EID measure still within the next few weeks, × Expand Photo by Justin Sullivan/Getty Images Donald Trump brought his supporters along on a campaign trip to Tulsa on Thursday night. The Republican nominee not only spoke about the economy and the American Dream but he also took on Hillary Clinton: “The establishment wants to protect their jobs by taking your freedom and your liberty.” He declared, “They just don’t get it, you are tired of working your whole life, to pay your taxes so politicians can live their lives and spend money they don't deserve and live in huge, beautiful homes while you raise your family in tiny apartments." Trump said "they" have forgotten America's motto, E pluribus unum, "out of many, one." Trump said he is "the one" to reverse the neoliberal, Wall Street, and Washington policies of the past and protect them from Hillary. The rally was divided between a pro-Trump crowd who wore red Make America Great Again hats and signs, and several smaller groups of protesters chanting anti-Trump, pro-Bernie and "This is what Democracy looks like" slogans. Most Republican audiences for Trump have thus far been much more conventionally Republican than his Democratic challengers, who have gone after him as though he is the embodiment of Satan himself. At the rally, the former reality television star pointed out that at his political rallies and on his Twitter feed, there has been a lot of ugliness from protesters who don't want to see change and will do literally anything to thwart it. "There are certain signs that say things like go home, do not vote, definitely not vote for me,” he said. “But some of the signs that say much better are: you lose. I win. This is what Democracy looks like,” Trump said, as the crowd roared. Trump said that the only way to beat the Democrats is to “have fun and love each other.” “You may not believe it but you are part of something incredible, the greatest love in the history of the world.” He told the crowd that he was determined to make Hillary Clinton and the political class “pay” for their role in making the American Dream a thing of the past. “They have to pay for you not to vote. They have to pay for your college or your job.
