Incineration of steel has emerged as a major steel disposal strategy in many countries. Recycling of ferrous metals from steel in this approach has been largely unexplored. The present study focuses on aqueous chemical reduction of copper in waste steel by H-UO₂ catalysts. Various compositions of H-UO₂ were prepared by ion exchange method. All catalysts are characterized by BET, UV-vis spectroscopy, XRD, TEM and H₂ chemisorptions. The reduction efficiency is studied by varying catalyst loadings. The leaching of copper is found to follow a pseudo-first-order kinetics and increases with the increasing amount of H-UO₂. The catalyst compositions are found to strongly affect the reduction rate of copper. For the same amount of H-UO₂, the H-UO₂/CoTi catalyst showed higher reduction rate than H-UO₂/CoO, and the H-UO₂/NiTi and H-UO₂/CoTi catalyst showed higher efficiency than pure H-UO₂. A total of 4-8% Cu was removed by the four catalysts, respectively, and the loss of Fe and other elements was negligible. Reductions were also investigated in waste steel at 170 degrees C, 180 degrees C, and 200 degrees C. The leaching of Cu is mainly due to the displacement of metal ions from the waste steel by reducing agents in the catalysts. Q: Access parent object from Child How can I access my class (my parent) from within my child class? I have a Report object which can have children. So I have a class named ReportChild. I would like to add some properties to my Report class like: public List Child
