i also decided to go with a brother scanner because i like their overall design and build quality. brother makes some great-quality appliances, from microwaves to coffee makers to printers, and their portable scanners are no exception. theyre available in an array of color models, including black and white, all with the same extremely simple design and sleek look. brother scanners are the only portable scanners with a standard flatbed and they all have two sensors, one for each side of a two-sided page. i've owned many of the brother models that have come out since the dx7400. brother is still the only manufacturer of portable scanners that i would consider buying, based on quality, features, and price. for us, speed wasn't as important as the features the es-310w offered, such as the ability to scan both sides of a document at once, creating digital and hard-copy versions of two-sided documents, and the ability to scan images. the es-310w's higher price points may be justified if you can afford to have a scanner in your office. we believe, though, that a fast scanner doesn't have to cost as much as one that does a lot more. all documents we scanned were images, but you can also use a portable to scan physical documents. all documents will require additional software to convert them to editable format, though, and the es-310ws does not have that capability. the noise level, though, is the most important factor of all. i've been very happy with the noise level of the epson ds-70, which produces similar noise levels to the epson dx-500, and does so without the use of battery power. the ds-70 has a noise level of 21dba, while the dx-500 has a noise level of 24dba. it's not exactly quiet, but it's better than most other portable scanners i've tested. i rarely have to turn off the scanner, and when i do, i won't notice the noise until it's too late to turn it off again.

a few years ago, we tested a handful of common office scanners and found that many of them were too slow to handle any meaningful work on them. epson's new ds-70 is the best portable scanner we've tested for speed. it's fast, accurate, and the prices, though a bit high, are reasonable. we're also fans of the sc-1600, another cordless scanner that works quickly, although it's just a bit pricier. both these scanners are great for business travelers and casual users alike. the speaker is loud enough, and the controls are easy enough to manipulate, that you can position the speaker anywhere in the home or office, and adjust the volume to a level comfortable to you. it's bright enough for a room with little ambient light, and you can easily hear the voice of the person on the other end of the line while on a conference call. the primary function of the speakers is for music. their sound isn't too rich or crystal clear for in-home listening. when you turn on a song, they automatically connect to the other speakers and the volume increases on the other two speakers. there is no equalizer control, but the presets do seem to offer an approximation of what we're listening to. rockville rock party 6 dual 6.5 battery powered home/portable bluetooth speaker 200 watts peak power 100 watts program power 50 watts continuous rms power rechargeable speaker can last 3 - 8 hours per charge depending on volume built in bluetooth 5.0 audio streaming (up to 66 feet) built in wireless bluetooth pairing of 2 speakers using tws (true wireless stereo)
